It is true that during the first centuries of the Christian era, contrary to what you may think, churchgoers were considered as belonging to a sect and seen rather badly. Their persecutions lasted a long time. As you can see, what is powerful in your time did not persist easily. Great religious ways, which date back to long before Christianity, underwent the same fate.

"Since the dawn of time, it is just a series of new beginnings. What is new is disturbing, it shakes up the established rules, but human beings evolve and humanity turns toward other currents of thought, and towards spiritual ways that better suit its aspirations. That is how it must be. Nothing can be obtained easily. It is necessary to accept the incomprehension and continue on one's way.

"Intolerance will always rage in this world. That there are too many differences between human beings is the reason for it. The many races populating Earth do not tolerate each other, each one lacking tolerance towards the others.

"Continue on the way that you have chosen. You do not disturb your neighbour. Persecutions, whatever their nature, are not part of our practices."
