We are very demanding of you, so we understand your weariness. Your state of health does not encourage such an absorbing activity.

"Your willingness and desire to satisfy us make you advance.

"My dear daughter, believe us, we do appreciate that. We are going to slow down for a few days, to let you recover.

"As regards the number of messages received, for a while, some will be given for the attention of those who will read them. Other readers, more informed, will discern through those lines more than what could emerge from the first reading, and they will feed themselves spiritually on them.

"Nothing can be forced. Hearts ready to receive them will receive them according to their expectations.

"You do what we expect from you, you cannot do anything more. Time will decide upon the future life of these writings.

"Keep calm; they will not be eternally relegated to a drawer without living their own life.

"Mind your reactions; keep well all that you write. You must not sort and discard; everything must be kept. The future will decide quite well in this regard. Minds believing they are superior will be tempted to revise everything; you must not trust them."
