The human body suffers from all kinds of diseases. Vibratory disequilibrium is to blame for most of them. It can stem from a multiplicity of factors: weakness of constitution predisposing man to these disorders, planetary influences, various types of pollution and geomagnetic disturbances justify these internal turbulences. As a result, the psyche can be affected, without being considered as responsible, as it too often is. It is the easy way out. One dwells on the indication, and not on the real cause, without really being able to identify it. The interpretation, which is made, is generally incorrect, and inappropriate treatments sometimes accentuate the problems rather than solving them.

"Official medicine will have to open up to a research, which it is not used to. It will have to reconsider the man in his vibratory environment, which depends entirely on those surrounding magnetic fields, capable of disorganizing the cellular environment. It is an approach which is to be completely re-examined, an area which currently is badly explored and which will lead in the future to large ways of research."
