The human body suffers from all kinds of illnesses. Vibratory disequilibrium is most often to blame. It can stem from a multiplicity of factors: weakness of constitution predisposing man to these disorders, planetary influences, various types of pollution and geomagnetic disturbances account for these internal turbulences. As a result, the psyche can be affected – though all too often it is considered responsible. This is the easy way out. One dwells on the manifestation, without really being able to identify it, and not on the real cause. The interpretation is generally incorrect, and inappropriate treatments sometimes accentuate the problems rather than resolving them.

"Official medicine will have to open up to research that it is not accustomed to. It will have to reconsider human beings in their vibratory environment, which depends entirely on those surrounding magnetic fields capable of disorganising the cellular environment. It is an approach that should be reviewed completely, an area that is poorly explored at present and that will lead in the future to broad avenues of research."
