Friday, January 12, 2001 - 10:00 AM

You can follow the example of that woman who was not afraid of expressing herself throughout her writings, by speaking to Jesus in the language of her heart, and by writing it down, without fearing those who were ready to criticize. You can also see yourself in her; often doubting about the messages she was receiving, and that, until the end, in spite of the exhortations of her guide. They were discretely approved by the Church, their principal representative having given his full blessing, which allowed the subsequent publication of those books.[6]

"There are precedents, even in a religion that regards channelling as diabolic, but that can make exceptions to serve its own cause. Cases like this one are not rare. The sacred texts, which marked humanity, were written through this type of inspiration. The time has come not to look the other way anymore and to consider that only some privileged beings have the possibility to communicate with higher spirits.

"Why wouldn't our exchanges, too, be recognized on a large scale in the future? We had to remind you of the existence of those books so that you became aware of the similarity of both your situations and that person's qualms, which resulted from the exceptional experience she had to live. In such particular situations, only surrender and humility make it possible to manage the situation properly."

Babuji

Second Selection (Messages to all Members of the Human Fraternity)
[6] Thoughts and Reflections and Messages of Jesus, Volumes I and II.