

Saturday, January 20, 2001 - 10:30 AM

The system of communication between my son and you is taking shape favourably. We can express ourselves in a language, which he must get satisfaction from, even though we do not go into details and provide any guidelines. Our action lies elsewhere and he understands that perfectly.

"He was sufficiently close to me to know my reactions and my way of acting. These exchanges can only be beneficial and show him how much we are present in everything concerning the Mission, its evolution and the resultant difficulties.

"The 'lion' is irreplaceable for the time being. His multidimensional action reaches its apogee. He has chosen this image that characterizes him so well. He can keep his Anglo-Saxon humour and make good use of what both cultures brought to him. If it were not for your great tiredness, we could continue to converse. Rest, my dear daughter, forward to my dear son this mail, which is meant to be amusing. Our past tête-à-tête had a certain piquancy.

"I liked his quick mind, his so-penetrating intelligence and kind gestures towards me. May this nostalgic evocation of the past make him smile and regain courage. When the moment has arrived for us to rejoin, joy will be great on both sides."

Babuji