The Earth's history is both very ancient and rich. It had some advanced civilizations. Extraterrestrials, as you call them, came to establish exploration sites, and to build interplanetary relay stations. Some of them survived, even though not having their primary usefulness any more.

'The Pyramids belong to them. Many things are said and written about them. They still play an important role energy-wise. Revelations on this point will bring a new enlightenment to men of the future ages. The time has not come yet. Could they really understand all the subtleties of the system? They should at least start admitting that life exists on the planets of the solar system, and beyond. It will really be necessary to hit hard so that they accept this principle. A massive invasion will occur; we already mentioned that possibility, which alone will put an end to the wanderings of all forms of science.

'The whole picture will need revising. Those beings will bring an extraordinary knowledge that will leave the poor Earthlings stupefied, with their pompous ideas on everything, most of which are wrong or worthless. Those beings will come in order to protect the universal balance from men's misconduct as well as from the huge risks they're running with their so-called progress, which is alarming in many respects."
