Tuesday, April 24, 2001 - 8:00 AM

This beautiful flowering of the Mission—as you fervently wish it—you will not see it on this Earth, but you can believe me, it will occur. We are all of us working here to that end, and each one of you, our aspirants, you are also working towards this great achievement. That must motivate you and make you advance, whatever the current circumstances. One should never trust appearances, humans are changing, but the destiny of the Earth does not change. It is all mapped out, irremediably.

"Life has surprises in store: could you think that one day you would write all these messages? The discovery of Sahaj Marg, when you made it, did not seem of capital importance to you, but see how much it has transformed your life over the years.

"The destiny of each one is fulfilled at all costs; man cannot change anything about it.

"In the broad outline, it is achieved, and man should better adapt himself to the events emerging during his existence. Regrets are useless; he cannot restart his process afresh. He can only try to ensure that the rest of his life complies with his aspirations and make a success of it, by getting down to it with faith and determination."

Babuji