y son is broken-hearted. He is getting more and more tired physically and he is deeply affected by this new malevolent attack. It is not easy to come to Earth to help men. One has to carry on regardless of the barriers erected by them and behind which they withdraw with arrogance.

"Divinely guided beings have to face frightening forces, and fights ensue as related in some sacred texts. Our way is no exception to the rule; it is given a rough time and its trials are far from over. One needs to know this and to look at the problem from a broader perspective, which is not new in this world. To prevail, good must overcome powerful forces. This combat is endless here below; even if the forces of evil are under control in some corners of the world, they reappear where they were not expected. The fight will stop when the Earth has settled up its karma and a new reign is established, entrusting the soldiers of peace with the task of maintaining order and harmony between the beings living on this planet."
