Friday, August 31, 2001 - 10:00 a.m. olecular structures of man, in general, are not configured to face this standardised life where electronics govern the smallest details. For some [people], the necessity to face up to things will create a real shock. Part of the population will adapt, but the gap will widen and leave behind others who will not be able to follow. When will this track race stop? Time, in its legendary wisdom, will replace this planet in its own ways and will sweep away this devastating civilisation, when the time comes.

"You, our aspirants, need not be worried. Your progress cannot lead you to falling; quite the contrary, it raises you above the worrying pollution of this world and protects you from its excesses. You give a profound meaning to your life. You organise your human businesses as well as possible and you have the wisdom to devote a good part of your time to spiritual matters, of which the real meaning has not escaped your attention. You will make a success of your life, since you preserve the main thing by giving it its true place. Be blessed and in peace, all is well."
