Friday, October 12, 2001 - 10:00 a.m.

Continue to serve us as you usually do with humility and devotion. It is necessary to be able to adapt oneself, whatever the circumstances; it is a quality that is wise to cultivate. We are not parted from each other, as you would be inclined to believe. There is another work which must be done temporarily; you should therefore be in acceptance."

Babuji

"Being able to accept, to adapt oneself and bow to necessity; this is what we all do here. We act wherever necessary, only the motivation for serving urges us to act. Where we are, the notion of service takes on its full meaning. We are carried by an auspicious and constructive energy, which we try to make mankind benefit from. The task is not easy; we face great resistance.

"You may find these comments strange. [That there are] invisible forces working for men's good, is this possible? They cannot measure [the relevant] result and yet an enormous work is being carried out which they cannot value. The important thing is to do, to help this planet by all possible means, to bring it to a higher life turned towards the Inexpressible Joy."

The Envoy