ou are not a machine; we had to underline what such a work represents humanly. Your steadfastness in taking down these messages results in an accumulation of writings with great diversity, answering most of the questions our aspirants ask themselves.

"We cannot go further for the moment; we are compelled to keep silent on the great mysteries which surround life beyond this planet. We can only insist on the fact that communication is possible and especially that life is carried over in different forms than those known to humans. The spirit remains; it does not remain anchored to the body of flesh, which returns to a primitive form to merge into matter and to undergo the imperative mutations. As concerns the subtle bodies, they extricate themselves and carry on their process outside the material context specific to the Earth. The physical body is only a mass of matter in transformation, which feeds the life of this world.

"Current knowledge is so far away from reality that it would not accept such. It will take a lot of time yet before all these phenomena can become obvious to man."
