A Fourth Revelation

These messages could be read in small portions, each day, like a necessary food for the spirit. We suggest this means of familiarising yourself with these messages, in addition to your sadhana. The two activities complement each other perfectly.

"Do not worry about criticisms which these writings may prompt. Which great works, known universally to date, did not receive bitter criticisms in the beginning? The biblical writings were no exception, nor any other work, profane or sacred. What matters is not in the appreciation that they can raise among the greatest number, it is in the quality of emotion and openness likely to touch the hearts ready to benefit from them.

"It is impossible in this world to reach a consensus on something, whatever it is. It is a recognised and accepted fact that one must carry on in all circumstances, especially when the issue is worth it.

"Making these messages public will prompt reactions of all sorts. This should not stop the process. Nothing can be obtained easily in this world, even when it is about doing good."
