Tuesday, February 5, 2002 - 10:00 a.m.

The time for doing one's accounts will come for you just like for any of the incarnate beings, ineluctably. It will come with a trail of regrets and remorse that may arise from your personal assessment. This aspect must be taken into account; only you will have to manage this assessment, in terms of the reactions it will cause in you. While moving, you have made a good decision in following our way; your practice can only contribute to changing what existed before. By practising regularly, you clean the place and you thus allow better work, in terms of the results it must give you. Persevere, assiduously, and a day will come when the divine goal will be reached. Put all your heart into this work, all your fervour; the result is worth the sorrow of it. Great successes, in all areas, can only be obtained by dint of it. You will not be disappointed. You don't waste your time; you can believe us. Haven't we set an example of this achievement? It is up to you to judge with the means at your disposal.

"Be confident; be reassured and especially happy for having reached the stage where your soul strongly aspires to rise. May our blessings help you all and contribute to your full success."

Babuji