(Weekend seminar conducted by Jacky Baroukh.)

This gathering is important; it instils new blood into the ashram, which, to some extent, is given a new lease on life. This revival is the result of a work of purification, which has been carried out for some time now. We are always attentive to what takes place there. The ashrams are interesting points of radiance for countries where they are located; a little like lamps to which, unfortunately, no one pays the attention they deserve. In our organization, everything has its own importance: even differences in opinion can lead to something good for the group. Therefore, you should respect the different points of view of your brothers. Be united on the main thing; be positive and constructive.

"Blessings."
