The science of the soul is the least explored. Human beings ignore this priceless treasure. Their approach to it does not go in the right direction – one might at least know oneself well before trying to penetrate the secrets of the universe.

People are afraid of going to the heart of things. Many of them do not believe in higher forces weaving the threads of their destiny. They are afraid of this kind of 'greatness', and unconsciously they try to escape it. They want to be autonomous, deciding their own lives, which they believe they are conducting as they like. They want to know, believing that they can thus acquire some power over the elements. When they decide to go explore other planets, it is a lower instinct of conquest that is manifesting. To plant a flag, to dominate, to occupy a territory and to disturb the established order unscrupulously – that is the ideal that motivates them. Human beings would like to exercise their powers beyond this planet, the exploration of which has become banal. They have taken control of, ransacked and polluted everything. They do not discover with a view to respecting creation; for them, a virgin territory is a source of profit. Their desire for the conquest of space is seen in this context.
