Thursday, July 4, 2002 - 10:00 AM

My dear son,

"Progressively you will receive the messages which were given to our scribe. They are imbued with compassion for our brothers who fight, facing the many difficulties of their existence on Earth. There is already everything in our literature, but through these messages, we wish, when the moment comes, to make them benefit from these pieces of advice, which can be used every day.

"They partake of the greatest simplicity of approach and implementation, if they are acknowledged in the very spirit that drives them. My son, try to judge for yourself what they can provide, and the way they can be used. Common sense guides you in all circumstances, here as elsewhere; it will be able to do what is appropriate.

"Soon the pace of the translations will intensify and you will have a broader view of what these writings represent. Through them, we are trying to communicate to you all possible love, in the form of thoughts, which can serve our way. The whole strength of our love accompanies you, my beloved son."

Babuji