an's supreme refuge is in this place that nothing can disturb. It is an unparalleled grace for him to find the way leading to it. His only true richness is there, in this way of openness and spiritual realisation. Time makes him become aware of this truth. Happy is the one who reaches this stage of evolution and who knows that, except for this research, all is futile in this world. The way to this stage is long. He has to experience so many tests, multiple sufferings, and disillusionments before understanding that here is only a transitory place where much time is needed to be refined, and to understand the need for this training. God, in His great kindness, does not impose anything in vain, only, from life to life, a stage necessary to the evolution of the being."
