Wednesday, November 27, 2002 - 8:00 AM

Expansion of the intellect is not the way towards supreme beauty. Let us be wary of fashion and present currents of thought. Our method must remain what it was initially, without any addition to it whatsoever.

"My son is the guarantor of its effectiveness, in its original simplicity. Let us be careful not to include anything that could distort it, and invite unfounded extrapolations in our system. Our way is self-sufficient. We must help minds divest themselves of superfluity. Our staunch candidates must progress towards this sobriety and not unnecessarily clutter up their minds by going into all directions. That they want to do it is their choice, but please let us not allow our method to be weighed down by the useless addition of elements that would bring irrelevant fancy to it.

"The sagacity of my son will not allow this kind of drift. He is vigilant and will not let undesirable contributions to be inserted in what exists.

"Sahaj Marg should not be a two-tier system. Those who really want to advance, get to the heart of the matter, without feeding their mind with wrong ideas that are in fashion. A certain rigor must be maintained in our way, if it wants to conquer the future as wished by the higher authorities. Drifts are appearing on the horizon here and there, we count on the authority of our dear son to remedy the situation.

"Our Mission is not a club to foster new and original ideas capable of satisfying the curiosity of its members. It is necessary at all costs to avoid these sorts of drifts; some practices trouble the minds instead of calming them down and leading them to find in them the desired serenity which is the objective of our work."

Babuji