A Fourth Revelation

uch a fervent call can only be heard. How can one remain deaf in such circumstances? When one comes towards a loving heart, it is good to leave therein the graces capable of embellishing it. A cold and dry heart cannot attract them.

"When you clear, little by little, the undergrowth from the arid path on which you climb towards the summit, many elements contribute to this advancement.

"In the way we propose to you, there are effective means to help you in your work. Love must emerge from you, maintained by your own flame, which we can easily stoke; but it is necessary for it to gush forth from you spontaneously and draw all its power from the aspirations of a fervent soul. This dimension gives your process a special base. While you advance on this way with a heart full of love, the asperities that characterise it seem less hard. It is good to develop love inside oneself; without it, the climbing is likely to run out of steam. It is essential to any process; it constitutes its richness and beauty.

"Without it, the great achievements remain out of reach. Strongly invite it – if it is not already strong enough in you – to hoist you towards the summits. To reach them, love must spark brilliantly in you to the extent of covering all the rest.

"Love is the most powerful force; it is capable of achieving wonders."
