Whispers from The Brighter World

Friday, June 20, 2003 - 10:00 AM

My dear son,

"Both our hearts are permanently united, as you know. You have made the final step in relation to that union, as you have been informed recently. You know how very dear you are to my heart. Your place in it has constantly expanded since the day I left this world. What else could I tell you which you might not already know! We follow you step by step, but we must let you act in your own way, though we guide you on essential aspects. You are the great figure of Sahaj Marg in this beginning of the century, and you will remain an example for your successors in the way you manage the matters of our Mission, both on the material and the spiritual level.

"It is unfortunate that our medium is not in your wake, but so it is. We must content ourselves with the possibilities offered by this system; it is worth commending.

"Spare yourself, my son. We need you, as you know. The time has not come yet for you to be relieved. My love wraps you up and carries you like a child, since we are all children till one's dying breath. All your strength is offered to the Mission. You give yourself body and soul and we appreciate each of the sacrifices you make to serve our cause.

"You should know that every day, the reality underlying these lines, which are now personally addressed to you, is that all our hearts united together are here in order to be heard by you: the shepherd divinely elected and loved by all the hierarchy to lead souls left in our care towards their highest destiny.

"May the power of this love and our blessings especially delight you and soothe your heart, my child."
