

Thursday, July 3, 2003 - 10:00 AM

Nothing better can happen to a fervent person with strong faith than eulogizing love, praising God, and praising their Master! He attracts divine grace, for which his heart is henceforth a chosen place. Isn't everything else useless except this process? What imperishable thing will outlast him, when he has left this world: even the great names are lost in the memory of time.

"Praising God is equivalent to taking part in the Great Work, imperceptible to human beings. He [the human being] emanates from it and he can't sufficiently stand back. Which approach should he follow? He is bathed in an energy that he cannot define. Is he aware of it? Certainly not. These phenomena are completely beyond him.

"The divine love is the subtlest existing vibration. It is the best element in man. We use this channel to help him progress. Our way draws on this great redeeming principle, which is operating in this world at the dawn of the new era. This energy generates the greatest achievements although it cannot sign them. Only they are recorded among the true heritage of humanity. All the rest is transitory and illusory.

"Arousing love in the hearts is a noble mission. It is done in silence, without any effect that could create people's admiration. Great achievements are accomplished in the secrecy of hearts."

Babuji