Saturday, December 13, 2003 - 10:00 AM

It is good, for all our brothers to become aware of the timelessness of their lives. They are just passing by on this Earth, on a segment of a long journey, which they will continue elsewhere. They are not immortal, contrary to the behaviours they often adopt, as if all their life came down to this incarnation. Many know it and yet they continue to attach importance to facts that are unworthy of it, by virtue of lack of hindsight. It is not easy to do it in any event; a long work of interiorization is necessary to obtain this result. Detachment in the heart from this modern life, harmful in many respects, cannot be easily attained. The spiritual practice remains the safety belt and provides delectable joys, renewable altogether. Nothing is fictitious in this process: these values not being distorted at the outset.

"Amid the hustle and bustle of the world remains an unassailable Eden capable of helping the being to be reshaped in this life and well beyond. The echoes of his current process can influence his subtle bodies, which he is connected with permanently. This aspect of things should not be neglected. Nothing is insignificant or meaningless. Everything has its raison d'être. Man cannot really define himself; his incarnation here below does not allow it. He must nevertheless become aware of the responsibility for his deeds. Life is as a whole connecting him with the immutable beauty. He still has to go a long way to refine himself and consequently to be worthy of approaching it. We invite our brothers to meditate on this divine aspect of life."

Babuji