Thursday, December 18, 2003 - 10:00 AM

We must spare you, my child. Your desire to be useful makes you go beyond your strength. Your heart is offered to us in a touching way. Only account for him this report/ratio of abandonment to our will. We cannot save you everything; we accompany you in our own way. Blessed are those who surround you in this struggle, to face it as well as possible.

"Be confident in better days and think, as you do, of those who fight and suffer under terrible conditions. Remain connected with us through the heart and accompany your Master in your mind, failing the possibility of following him, as you would like to do. He is also fighting to give of his best, in spite of all sorts of difficulties.

"Rest, and have a good sitting."

Babuji