Whispers from The Brighter World
A Fifth Revelation

Friday, February 20, 2004 – 10:00 a.m.

Peace of mind is never absolutely guaranteed in this world where turbulence is occurring incessantly, sometimes making life difficult. Man cannot lead a peaceful and worry-free existence. Would that be manageable in the long run? How could he grow and make the most of his many resources?

"Doing his soul-searching, assessing his strength and endurance – and especially the confidence and surrender that characterise him in certain situations when his faith is likely to be shaken – that is the challenge he is confronted with. The periods of quietness facilitate self-assessments; they are constructive when done in this spirit and imbued with some wisdom.

"The university of life is continuous; so will it be until the end. There is no rest in this world where everything fluctuates unceasingly. The status quo would signal its end, its annihilation. This does not apply uniquely to the planet Earth; it partakes of the Great Whole, which is itself animated by the universal creative force that is constantly being renewed.

"Movement also characterises our way: everything changes and evolves in it. It cannot escape the divine laws from which it originated. That which surprises man occurs with good reason, even if he does not understand the meaning of events. The dregs have to surface before being eliminated. Whatever the situation, a human being finds he is placed in front of his own conscience, the divine presence in him – and this presence, no one can deceive. During trying moments, withdrawal into oneself is a true comfort; the divine life is free from baseness, and the being spontaneously takes refuge in it."
