Whispers from The Brighter World

Sunday, May 16, 1999 – 8:00 a.m.

We understand your difficulties and the efforts you make to sustain yourself; we are not insensitive to this. We have provided you some improvement on certain aspects, but we cannot change everything.

Become aware of the good you are doing by taking down these messages; let them be a diversion for you from a state you must endure.

The time you all spend on Earth is short; this is the preparatory school, and your future depends on it.

Be good pupils, grateful for receiving an often tedious but constructive training.

During the most difficult moments, try to have a clear-eyed view of events. Take a step back to assess the situation. Put things in perspective and draw relevant conclusions, knowing that what affects you is often not serious and that time resolves things.

When faced with trials, try to think of the millions of beings who are living under inhuman conditions and for whom nothing is done.

The rest of humanity is often aware; gestures are made and good deeds are undertaken, but it is quite insufficient.

When everything goes wrong for you, try to do something for those who are in inextricable situations. Your problems will not be solved for all that, but through your generosity of heart and your thoughts, you may help a soul in distress, and for a while you forget your own worries.

You are no longer focused on your pain or your familial or monetary problems. You free yourselves of them in a certain way.

Compassion is an important element not to be neglected; it is even essential to your evolution.

Cultivate it. By letting yourselves merge into human misery in general, you will minimize your own.

You will find it more bearable. Never cease working on yourselves. It is your great work, the most decisive in the final analysis.

When you take stock of your life, you will not have to brood over having missed one of the most important aspects. Sharpen your judgement about yourselves; sooner or later, you will have to do it, better not to waste time. Take heart.
