We must prepare our aspirants for the great changes that are going to occur on Earth. Their routine, their intellectual comfort, are suitable for many of our brothers. We must rush them even if the unknown repels them, especially with these messages coming from another world, this principle not being necessarily admitted by all.

"Trusting one's Master means also relying on his assessment and inspiration. They must know that their judgment does not carry much weight in the face of the realities of a world that exceeds them completely, as they cannot grasp it. A spiritual Master of his level is capable of making decisions on issues of which he alone can assess the importance and the interest for our Mission.

"Humans exercise their critical mind very easily; it is so easy to them. Acting with discernment is quite another matter. In the spiritual area, truth—more than elsewhere—is not easy to grasp. To refrain from any judgment is the most appropriate attitude. A Mission like ours cannot grow without giving rise to controversy; this aspect of human nature inevitably manifests itself. Most of our abhyasis have understood that only their work matters, their time being numbered in this world, and that progressing in their personal quest was the most fulfilling aspect.

"May wisdom grow in the heart of each one of them, freeing them from prejudices and reactions, often misplaced, about everything."
