

Friday, August 20, 2004 - 10:00 AM

Let your dreams of travelling come true in you, my child; there, is the door opening out onto great spaces of an infinite variety. Any of the things that could fill you with wonder on Earth are merely pale images trying to imitate a reality existing beyond the borders of this world. Everything is mere illusion, as you know; your heart should no longer let itself be ensnared. It has better things to do; didn't the dazzling conquest of spirituality become a priority to it?

"The most beautiful trips in this world can give way to melancholy, or even a feeling of frustration or something like that. The soul is not satisfied with trips, its fatherland calls it and it expresses it on many occasions. Pleasures on Earth are very transient; they leave sometimes memories tinged with melancholy, because of an emptiness that can be felt, more or less.

"An awaking soul becomes demanding like a hungry child who is shouting. He can express himself forcefully; a soul in its aspiration to rise has only discretion as a way of expressing itself. An attentive man perceives this need within himself, and looks for a way out; caught in an upswing, he cannot resist.

"Opening one's mind to spirituality is like opening a very valuable book where each page always allows more beauty to be discovered. Nothing is comparable to this inner beauty we are referring to, even if through simple words, we are trying to embellish our comments with images. Our brothers will be able to understand us: they experience this state every day, since they are following the right way."

Babuji