Friday, May 21, 1999 - 10:00 a.m.

Beware of your reasoning. Even if you believe you are intelligent, humble yourself by seeing yourself as limited to a very small sphere. All your beautiful essays on such and such life aspects are questionable. Do not have too many illusions about your own person; we watch over you as parents do with their children and your small simplistic theories make us laugh, even if you believe you have discovered the alpha and omega. It is good to analyse, to reflect on all that surrounds you and on what you do not understand, but don't have final opinions and don't believe you hold the truth. You would be completely mistaken. Meditate well on all that, and above all, remain simple."

Babuji