Wednesday, September 8, 2004 - 10:00 AM

Come and rest within the immutable peace. This preamble befits your heart; it raises for it the veil of the limitations compelling this world to live in the ignorance of the essential truths. Disorientated, it does not know where to go; humans have no reference mark anymore. The sense of duty and integrity is lost. Becoming increasingly fickle, they are living from day to day, without a real line of conduct.

"Opening out to spirituality constitutes for them the best process likely to give a real meaning to their current existence. Being unsatisfied by the pursuit of material properties and pleasures, they feel emptiness within themselves, which only this process will be able to fill. It will open prospects to them beyond the sight for life here below.

"When the appeal of the Divine is felt, no soul can remain insensitive. It opens out prudently to this new life, letting it foresee real relief. So, one had to reach this point to understand the meaning of this incarnation, of the ordeals it has in store, as well as joys, including those relating to self-control. It shows, beyond the human characteristics, the great and sublime aspects being hidden behind this facade of flesh, in the heart of the being.

"There is the secret, the only worthwhile treasure; we will never say it enough. May our brothers be fully aware of it and never forget it, which they often do. Letting themselves be carried by the swirl of material life, they waste an invaluable time in it. That which they are devoting to their spiritual process is the best possible investment. When the assessment time has come, they will note it and possibly be pleased with the results."

Babuji