

Saturday, October 30, 2004 - 10:00 AM

When the Spirit inspires it, the richness of thought knows no limit. That is a teaching not given in high level universities. Some beings that have influenced humanity did not attend them and yet, thanks to their inspiration, they became geniuses. Humanity benefits from this grace, which is not fully recognized, as its criteria of appreciation are different from those of men. In this world, good and evil clash continuously, distorting the game of values. Both can be hiding under deceptive appearances, creating regrettable misunderstandings. This is characteristic of illusion, an essential attribute of this level of consciousness where everything inevitably reverts back to this parameter. We must take account of it in all the manifestations of life, and differentiate between them as far as their essence is concerned. Human behaviours are prone to such variations that only their profound nature is to be considered.

"Following a spiritual way helps to preserve in oneself a satisfactory equilibrium in this deceptive context. A right way allowing the spiritual being to open out, warns against a certain number of deceptive effects. One's human nature must be managed in many circumstances; it is not always easy to handle it. To acquire wisdom through the heart, where the best of the being prevails, provides a considerable relief. In the face of the hardness of life on this Earth, it is good to have in oneself this resource, shedding clearer light on a permanent and determining challenge in the ineffable quest of the Divine."

Babuji