Whispers from The Brighter World

Tuesday, May 25, 1999 – 10:00 a.m.

Read again the beautiful texts of Kabir. Let your heart sing as he does, he knows so well how to do it.

Rise above the baseness of this world, see only the beautiful.

See in each one, beyond appearances, the purpose of their successive incarnations.

Think that numerous 'missioned' beings are returning to Earth to help this civilization advance, trying to make it evolve in the right direction, towards greater humanity.

Technology is valuable up to a certain point. There comes a moment when it is a source of unhappiness for many people; such is currently the case.

The era of robotization, which is developing, will bring nothing good to humans.

What will they do in the future? They will be mere witnesses, dumb with fear and dying of hunger.

It is necessary to stop this process and, at last, think of all the beings who populate the Earth.

What will tomorrow's world be if this devastating advance of science is not halted. Sooner or later, it will produce destructive effects for the planet.

There will come a time when in order to survive many will have to revert to ancestral customs. They will have to learn again to live with little, and very simply.

Progress does not necessarily bring happiness.

Balance, there as elsewhere, is not easy to find. All that is done to the detriment of the being is bad.

Evolution and involution are two aspects of the divine laws which have been manifesting since the beginning of time.

Nothing stops this process. Great civilizations of the past have returned to nothing, so will others.

This is the way it is, humans will always have to follow this movement and adapt.
