

Sunday, December 19, 2004 - 10:00 AM

This world is in turmoil, and human beings are running all over the place as if they were frightened at the first sign of danger. They get drunk on noise, and their equilibrium is disturbed by images, many of which are polluting and generate various evils whose cause in certain cases relate to this lack of interiorization and serenity. All this contributes, on this Earth, to endangering life in its various aspects.

"In the current cycle, man is entangled in a system that he cannot reverse by himself. The elements will do it in due time, driven by a divine will, the only one capable of restoring normality in this world. The relevant cost will be heavy. How could it be otherwise, since man destroys shamelessly what creation offered to him in terms of admirable things, orchestrated in the minutest details aiming at reaching perfection? What does a spiritual man become in this turmoil? He does his personal best; he tries to find himself, while seeking a favourable way out, a way that corresponds to him.

"Nothing is simple for him. Spurred on by a critical mind like all his fellow creatures, he neglects sometimes the essentials and dwells on inescapable human failings. Only common sense and his thirst for the Divine will inspire in him the action to be taken. Among his brothers who, like him, are involved in a process capable of leading them, he must disregard human weakness and consider only the goal to be reached. The goal has to be attained through a spiritual Master who can guide him and inform him in the secrecy of his heart, where wonder is being developed and where all the delights are."

Babuji