Whispers from The Brighter World

Thursday, May 27, 1999 – 8:00 a.m.

All could be beautiful on Earth, if peace reigned among human beings. May the strongest help the weakest. May hatred, envy, vice and other dark aspects disappear.

What an Eden it would be, but it would no longer be the Earth! Such is humanity at this stage of evolution.

In this garden, weeds would constantly need to be removed.

So, look with delight at these beautiful species, these magnificent flowers that touch you by their beauty.

These specimens manage to grow, embellish and transform the entire space.

Certain beings are like that. They advance in life without fully seeing what surrounds them; the ugliness of the world does not affect them.

They see only the beautiful in each one, as did brother Francis of Assisi.

These are beings whose purity places them above the ugliness of life.

The ideal would be to arrive at this state of saintliness.

It is necessary to start, even in a small way, by looking towards the unique benefactor of the world, who expects of us only perfection and love.

Try! You will perhaps, with a little effort, have some success that will encourage you to persevere.

Why shouldn't each of you achieve, with time, this blessed state which would make of you a saint of sorts?

Nothing is impossible to a person of goodwill.

We encourage you to try the experiment. These small individual actions can bring about big changes on Earth.

Never stop thinking that it could one day become a large garden full of flowers where it would be good to live.
