Whispers from The Brighter World
A Fifth Revelation

Saturday, February 19, 2005 – 10:00 a.m.

Knowledge is advancing in small doses; it does not serve any purpose to try to rush the movement too much. A great step must be taken in future decades for the good of all.

"It is time for humanity to forge ahead. Its stagnation does nothing but generate horror, and this under false pretences. There are no more limits to anything. The gigantic scale [of things in this world] puzzles human nature, overwhelmed by what surrounds it. Man's spirit no longer finds a satisfactory resonance in this world where the deafening noises of the cities limit its manifestation.

"The return to a more serene life would solve many problems that are characteristic of the current civilisation, whose balance has reached a disturbing stage. A human being's capacity to adapt to what surrounds him has limits. It will be necessary to bring order. Nature will be able to attend to that; so has it always been, since time immemorial.

"As far as we are concerned, our role is limited to spiritual life. Being indispensable, it feeds souls and wakes them up to a higher reality.

"Our way acts within a specific framework. It proceeds in that direction without departing from it or adding superfluous concepts to it that will become obsolete when the full light is shed on the real potential of man. Our current teaching is self-sufficient. Not yet understood by a great number of aspirants, it nevertheless opens up the roads of the future and does its work in the hearts. All its importance will be acknowledged with time; a vast movement is taking shape in line with spiritual evolution, and this is irreversible."
