Whispers from The Brighter World

A Fifth Revelation

Thursday, March 3, 2005 – 10:00 a.m.

Each person must struggle and bear his burden; that is how it is. The laws governing this world are inflexible and cannot be circumvented; they do not exclude compassion towards one's fellow creature, quite the contrary. Ordeals generally considered as unfair by men are however necessary for their evolution, but this principle is far from being admitted by all.

"How could it be different in a world where ignorance prevails regarding karmic laws and, without exception, their impact on the life of all beings? Knowing this sheds light on the realities of an incarnation. Each human being must assume his destiny and accept what characterises it. Rich or poor, powerful or wretched, values established by men do not mean anything, except in their manifestations in this illusory world.

"Men take their social position seriously, judging themselves superior, especially if they have some possessions, material or intellectual. They must be wary of this feeling of superiority, especially when it comes to the issue of racial differences, which in itself is real poison as it maintains hatred among peoples.

"The truth is very far from these aberrations. In front of God, all are equal and in this area the true values of a being reside at another level. Our way acts in that direction; only the elevation of the soul is taken into account. May all our brothers never forget these principles at the risk of harming their soul! Again, we repeat ourselves on this, as we see among them too many reactions that harm their progress.

"The truth is at the end of the road. It is high time, at least for our aspirants, to approach it a little more each day."
