Whispers from The Brighter World

A Fifth Revelation

Sunday, April 3, 2005 – 10:00 a.m.

My child, don't get older. The simplicity of heart is the most beautiful present that one can receive. Humility is an invaluable treasure for a soul in quest of the Absolute. The way to this state of consciousness is long. When it is acquired, it is advisable to keep to it absolutely. Let your heart exhale its fragrance; one day it will touch other hearts that are stripped of useless aspects.

"Through these lines, they will feel divine inspiration; there are true mystics among our brothers and sisters, capable of liking such comments without finding them vapid. To go towards simplicity, towards wisdom, is to become again like little children whose minds are not overburdened by the wanderings of an overactive mind, concealing from them a very simple truth.

"Indeed, truth is simple. It has nothing to do with complicated formulas relished by some lost seekers. May light emerge in them and bring them little by little towards the banks fragrant with the most subtle scents. In them, they will discover what they vainly look for elsewhere; the treasure is there and they do not know it. The work carried out in our system leads them towards interiorising themselves, discovering the Divine in aspects which they cannot imagine.

"To love infinitely – to let oneself be carried away by the redeeming wave of divine love, of grace – leads to the quintessence, to the total union with this powerful force that goes beyond all reasoning or words, however strong they may be, up to the much sought-after goal in the heart of silence and inalterable peace.

"May this day be marked by it, along with the effects that it can produce in a loving heart."
