Beloved Master
Revered Babuji Maharaj

Whispers from The Brighter World

A Fifth Revelation

Saturday, April 16, 2005 – 10:00 a.m.

Compassion is an element of spiritual life. It is its driving force and shows the ability of a heart to be moved by the misfortune of his fellow creatures.

"All men are equal. Emanating from the Divine, they carry identical characteristics, which are nevertheless expressed differently in the eyes of men. Compassion and love are one: loving one's neighbour is to love God, the Creator of all things, unifying the entire creation in a single and unique energy.

"The various elements are inseparable and linked together, dazzlingly diverse and constituting a harmonious whole, rich in teaching.

"To infinitely love one's Master is to have integrated this higher principle, leading one to consider the points mentioned above as established. To love the Master's spiritual person is to be integrated into a widened level of consciousness, leaving aside human sentimentality since it often occurs without real consistency, as it fluctuates according to events.

"A disciple's commitment towards his Master goes beyond all that. He refrains from judging, being grateful for not possessing the keys of knowledge, those that relate to Divine power. A true disciple is surrendered, trustful and reassured; he knows that he has made the right choice in having made this commitment. He also knows, having surpassed the framework of existential questionings, where he is headed and under what conditions.

"Faith on this level is man's greatest treasure. May our way help our brothers to progress in this direction!"

Babuji

