Friday, June 4, 1999 - 8:00 a.m.

As announced, my son has not been long in setting out again after the celebrations. Time is pressing; he has so much to do. Concerning human relations, too, his is irreplaceable. The Mission is extending to new countries; men are ready to act—these are psychologically healthy and determined beings. The greatest freedom reigns in our way, this is worth underlining. This is, inter alia, what makes it strong. There is no indoctrination. Each individual can try to practice, they are helped, enlightened and are not subjected to any pressure. They can choose to continue or leave without any restriction, as is currently the case in certain ways, especially in the Occident.

"One must be vigilant on this aspect; false prophets and false gurus abound. They cause harm to the beneficial movements for humanity. The exaggeration of the media in the treatment of these topics is also harmful. It is true; there are disturbed and domineering individuals who, under a spiritual pretext, make a trade in unhealthily indoctrinating their followers. One should not get it all mixed up. They should learn how to separate 'the good grain from the rye grass'. The aspirant has to make a choice: he must be free to try the practice without being bothered, and to leave without any problem if he is not satisfied. This is very important.

"Here, the greatest freedom is offered to all. We suggest to the follower a means of rising up, we give him the access code for him to use it as he likes; he tests and generally makes good use of it. If he is only driven by curiosity, he will go elsewhere; this is perfectly within his rights. Nobody will try to hold him back, but this process will have perhaps been positive for him. If the ground is favourable, the small seed sown in the heart will possibly bear fruit."

Babuji