Whispers from The Brighter World

A Fifth Revelation

Monday, September 12, 2005 – 10:00 a.m.

Bouncing like a ball, when it hits the ground and then rises a little higher each time – that is what the struggle for life must resemble, particularly in its painful phases. One finds strong support in following the way chosen for one's evolution. Without any reference points, how could man advance and develop himself in this direction?

"In this world, no one is spared; sooner or later, ordeals occur and shake up habits, ensuring that each one questions himself. Considered from this perspective, ordeals are acceptable; but many human beings look at them differently and accuse God, who, according to them, cannot exist, given their misfortunes. Only awareness can lead them to understanding the true meaning of their existence on Earth. Man advances at his own pace. It takes time to clear the stages, and without assistance these stages weigh even more heavily. Referring to the God of one's heart is a precious support. How would life be in this world, if a majority of men and women had no belief?

"Our aspirants have their own beliefs; they have understood that within themselves resides the key capable of opening the door hidden to them, thus offering other prospects to them. The secret lies there, within them, yet they generally neglect it. It takes an important personal investment to begin a journey. We do not force anybody. Only the profound yearning of a seeker triggers our action. May all our abhyasis grow and be more and more committed within the way; it will unfailingly meet their expectations."
