Grand-Master's Birthday

Dearest Parthasarathi,

Beyond time and the celebrations which remain necessary to the memory of the Masters, these days provide our Mission with structure and a history. They are essential; may our successors remember them and abide by an exemplary form of worship. Is it not said and repeated in these messages that 'All has its raison d'être'.

This world is one of illusion, at all levels. A spiritual Master, as he becomes incarnate, must undergo the effects of it. It is not easy under these circumstances to always make the right decisions. We were all subjected to ceaseless dilemmas with uncertainty about doing the right thing. The challenge as far as you are concerned is enormous. Like us, you too act with all your heart and with all your soul by giving your energy, your life, for the good of an important mission: that of building a spiritual world, the most just world possible, meant to help humans. We are with you, dear son, in your fears, your doubts and your ceaseless struggles; your load is heavy.

May our love and our great strength carry you until the end and support you as is proper in this world of darkness.

For your courage, you have all our gratitude, as well as our unfailing love.

[We are] particularly with you on this day of grace for our way.
