Whispers from The Brighter World

Monday, September 3, 2012 — 10:00 a.m.

Accepting life as it is testifies to one's strength; trying to make the most of it and seeing the positive aspects in the long run in many circumstances allows for a more favourable management of events. Nothing is simple here below; one must face up to things at all costs when the worst arises. Following a spiritual path is an indication of strength and a commitment that helps one to make allowances for things. This dimension helps one to gain perspective, to grow stronger in the face of adversity and to act accordingly. No one is spared in this world. An incarnation is a test somehow, a means of advancing and divesting oneself of useless aspects, which is not always easy. So many events occur; they are able to often destabilise the strongest people. There lies the purpose of life: this life which offers so many possibilities. Seeing only the positive is a sign of strength, provided you possess such strength.

"A process as proposed herein allows one, over time, to have a different approach to events. It does not solve everything — nothing can — but it gives an inkling of other horizons which are a positive outcome from this lengthy learning about life. Masters are not spared either; until the end they have to struggle and endure whatever their career entails. Such a career is inescapable and shows to aspirants that trials are inevitable and even necessary; that's how it is, we cannot change the relevant rules. A worry-free material life does not exist. We are offering what does exist to our abhyasis so that they can advance against all odds, become stronger in the face of adversity and develop in themselves the essential aspect: an acceptance that opens, among other things, the door to another dimension of consciousness.

"Blessings."
