Don't be afraid to expose your love. "I am my beloved's and my beloved is mine." [the Bible, Song of Solomon 6:3] Doesn't this statement of this historical figure summarise everything? The beauty of a soul is revealed here. Why not say it? Why not express this unique aspect that a fervent heart can feel during its lifetime? This love ennobled his life and became his hallmark, the memory of which cannot be altered by time. To live without this kind of love is limiting and keeps the being away from a reality that it is very unfortunate to ignore. Living love — this highly spiritualised love — opens incredible prospects. Following a spiritual path and advancing, carried by this subtle energy, is the most beautiful asset of an incarnation. Blessed are those who possess within themselves this wealth that is unlike any other. It is passed from life to life; it is incomparable and forever leaves its mark on a heart.

The beautiful quote mentioned above has left its mark in people's minds and will do so for a long time. Divine guidance was essential for him and led him to high positions in subsequent incarnations. Love opens the most inaccessible doors; having it is a rare blessing. Happy are the hearts enriched with this treasure.

No one is spared here below. There are always tests and they are unavoidable. To go beyond them in faith and surrender is a sign of wisdom. Blessed are those who possess this strength — this highly precious asset that constitutes this extraordinary love. It is earned, it is acquired and it grows with time when the heart is devoted in the most beautiful way on this extraordinary journey: the search for the peace of the Ultimate, under the highest and most deserved blessings. Nothing is ignored; the slightest impulse of the heart is perceived by our hearts and valued over time. Such are the divine laws, in which everything is counted for the good of each person. This is how it is.
