Whispers from The Brighter World

Thursday, December 6, 2012 — 10:00 a.m.

What are we — a breath, a nothing, and nothing more.' This quote is very true; it summarises the situation perfectly. Compared to eternity, man is a mere element of very low importance and yet he exists for reasons which cannot be explained herein. This whole whirlwind of life characterises this world. Life on Earth is unique; each planet has its own form of life, which will be revealed in the future. Man is not currently ready to receive this teaching. Beings who are much more evolved live elsewhere and carefully observe this world, concerned by the turbulence induced by humans with regard to the general equilibrium. It will take a long time for this truth to be accepted. Man is not unique and certainly not the most advanced. As the saying goes, some things are better left unsaid; we are venturing herein into an unusual area. The writing process we are using here with these messages is not accepted by all, and yet all the spiritual Masters of the past have used it, which is still little known today. Regardless, to not advance in the understanding of phenomena is harmful to humans. We have no magic wand; time does its work, they say. May all our abhyasis open up to a reality that some still reject. That does not matter; we are moving and acting for the good of all, for the awakening of understanding in our Mission. This Mission is the way of the future, wherein its expansion will be very important. We must move forward and not stagnate in erroneous beliefs that do not prepare human beings to face what lies ahead.

"May all be blessed and enlightened."
