Whispers from The Brighter World

Thursday, December 13, 2012 – 10:00 a.m.

When the time for supreme delight has come, this world will become an Eden where life will be centred solely on the beauty of the Spirit. One can dream of such a time; it will come after a lot of turbulence and extreme hardships, requiring humans to gradually adapt to that new era referred to in the most ancient scriptures. Human beings will have to refine themselves, and considerably so. Life will be different in every respect; the world of matter will no longer be an obstacle to the blossoming of human beings. All will be relieved of what is unnecessary, of the ugliness and grossness that are currently slowing down the general evolution. Everything will have to be reconsidered; the higher powers will act accordingly. Each time has its own way of functioning. Rising above this current heaviness will sensitise humans to real values, which they will need to integrate for their own good and the good of all.

These future times will come; this is not utopian. Open-minded people must not only contemplate this way of life for future times, but somehow prepare for it. In upcoming incarnations, they will be confronted with other life experiences that are more fruitful in some way, and so very crucial. We are here projecting ourselves far beyond what exists today, but today is a preparation for the times to come. We have to allude to these times for good reasons.

These writings will live on in the future, and we must now move forward. This is how it is!
