Whispers from The Brighter World

Thursday, December 20, 2012 — 10:00 a.m.

My dear daughter, there is so much more to be said. Time results in necessary repetitions; they are required so that humans are able to comprehend what they didn't at first glance. Some principles remain unknown to many of our aspirants. Time will do its work as in all things; minds are opening up slowly, but the time of knowledge will come soon, when knowledge is perceived differently. Somehow, this world is functioning at a slow speed and nature is adapting to this pace. Humans are programmed like that; it's all harmonised here below and to a certain extent the established order is respected. However, that which is not respected destabilises humans and the consequences must be paid.

"Who really respects nature? The question will be raised more and more in the face of disasters caused by unacceptable and uncontrollable behaviours. It is all fragile despite appearances; creation is as one, and doing harm to a species triggers regrettable disturbances. How to make humans see reason when they are convinced of their superiority over all that surrounds them? In reality, such is not at all the case; creation is a whole, some balance has to be observed and far-reaching imbalance can lead to irreversible torments.

"When will humans advance in humility and respect for creation? They are not superior. Each of nature's kingdoms has its own laws and peculiarities; everyone should respect them with a view to a better balance. Spiritual practice must also lead to respecting the created world.

"Blessings."
