Whispers from The Brighter World

Thursday, January 3, 2013 – 10:00 a.m.

Imagining a better world is almost equivalent to building it. Positive thoughts create an environment conducive to the development of this future which will be more favourable to the blossoming of human beings. A constant cleaning is taking place although it does not seem so; such a situation must go to its peak before one day being rebuilt more favourably for human beings. One day, everything will have to be reconsidered; the current situation can only go to the extreme before coming back to standards that are more acceptable for an evolving humanity. Here below, nothing whatsoever is respected; everything is to be rebuilt in a positive manner. It will take upheavals of every kind for humanity to be transformed in the direction of what is good. This situation saddens us; all of us here work towards the good, but we cannot currently change the divine plans. They are very precise; everything has long been planned. Sowing the good seed, one that will restore a sense of true values to the world, is a strong hope, and we hold to it in our action. Many of our brothers and sisters realise how much individual behaviour can help in these troubled times to prepare this promising new era. So many good elements are working for the good of all.

The current situation moves us; may the pervading negativity give rise one day to a new world full of promise for all. It is up to each one to commit themselves for the best, strengthened by our never-ending blessings.
