Whispers from The Brighter World

Saturday, March 9, 2013 – 10:00 a.m.

It is a noble goal to advance against all odds, with faith and a love that brings hope for more peaceful times, better suited to the expansion of the soul. The seeker who is determined to progress does not practise in vain; each one, according to his or her commitment, is able to do it. What remains of a life, if not this approach that carries one's being to the best of oneself! An incarnation is short compared to eternity. Humans often lose valuable time; they do not assess, at its true value, the opportunity they are offered to advance and to refine themselves at the spiritual level.

Blessed are those who have this open-mindedness and who take advantage of what we teach them in order to go further in this commitment of the heart, far from lovely philosophical theories that bring no real results in this domain. Here the intellect is not involved in the practice; detachment and vacuity lead to a state of appreciable inner receptivity, favourable to the transmission work that is being done. These blessed moments are conducive to the elevation of the being, who thus attains serenity without having to spend long hours withdrawn from the world and its noise. It is not always easy in a busy day to spare some time for meditation, during which it is possible to extract oneself from one's environment. By finding peace within oneself during these times of meditation, one earns the right to live with joy, determined to progress ever further. Faith and commitment towards the Master are the essential ingredients for success at this level.

It is up to each one to be as committed as they can. All are helped and strengthened in their quest for the Divine.
