Whispers from The Brighter World

Sunday, July 28, 2013 – 10:00 a.m.

Be serene; what must be will be. The Mission will continue its expansion in the world, regardless of the turmoil and human tensions by which the egos of some people will continue to complicate things. Unfortunately, this is how it goes. Our abhyasis are not spared; some of them create tensions that should not be. An atmosphere of peace and harmony should be established against all odds. What matters here is only the Mission in its trajectory. Unity would be welcome, especially in these difficult times for the incarnate Master. He is preparing his successor, as he must, with love and clear-sightedness about the difficulties that await him. He himself knows what he went through before we were able to resolve some of the problems he faced.

Each one of us did our best in our time to prepare the person who was to take charge of the Mission after us, which is not an easy matter. May all our abhyasis continue to grow in tolerance and in respect for the choice of the Masters, without giving free rein to egotistical reactions that are unacceptable here. May all do their best for the serenity of our dearest son. Life is not easy for him in this difficult period.

Our blessings on the entire Mission for harmony, cohesion and respect for his decisions. What must be will be – we see to it. It is up to each one to act as best they can for the good of all.
