Whispers from The Brighter World

Sunday, August 4, 2013 — 10:00 a.m.

There's always something to say; everything here below repeats itself endlessly. Physical and spiritual bodies have the same requirements; this characterises the human being, who is subjected to unavoidable laws. As for the soul, it aspires to the Divine; this inner thirst can prove unquenchable. The true mystic does not tire of repetitions in this area, in rituals or the assimilation of texts that are proposed to him. It is important for him to thus meet the soul's deep longing to nourish itself on the emanation of the Divine. In this area, there is no shortage of teachings. The seeker is able to go through experiences and one day find the way that suits him. There lies his final step; he knows he is on the right track and he truly devotes himself to it with some degree of fervour, but he is on the path, that which reassures him in his innermost need for a redeeming quest. He instinctively understands that his choice is good, and he follows it with varying degrees of determination.

"Nothing should be forced in this area. We are doing our best for the abhyasi, and everything falls into place as naturally as possible. We are not forcing anyone or anything; we mean here to meet a real need. Blessed are the beings involved in a true process with this unique prospect: to truly rise towards a mystical ideal.

"Everything in life happens in a timely manner when the call is sincere and the aspirant is determined. Thus begins for him a real work whose outcome is promising. May the multitude arrive at this conclusion. Everything has its raison d'être here below; a true spiritual path is the culmination of a lifetime."
